Free THOUGHTS Occasioned by the DECLARATION OF WAR against Spain.

NOTHING will redound more to the Honour of His Majesty's Government, than the late Declaration of War against Spain; for tho' involving a Country in Disputes founded only upon the Ambition of a Prince, is always attended with Consequences lamented by the People, (who are sure to share in the Sufferings of such a War, tho' they reap not the Advantages obtained by Success:) Yet no Publick Conduct can more merit the Publick Applause, than the proper Exertion of a Military Force, when all Pacifick Means have been tried to no Effect.

The Blessings attending Peace are so many; and so numerous are the Dangers which accompany the most successful War; that as (especially to a trading Nation) nothing is so desireable as the former, nothing ought to be enter'd upon with more Precaution than the latter.—— In this Respect the unwearied Endeavours of His Majesty to prevent the Interruption of such Branches of Commerce as will unavoidably be affected by a Rupture with Spain, and the many Expedients offer'd for adjusting amicably the Differences that have so long subsisted between the two Nations, must have sufficiently convinced the Subjects of Great Britain, that our not obtaining, before now, a proper Satisfaction for past Injuries, and Security from future Insults, has not been owing to the Want of a steady and tender Regard for the Interests of the People, nor of the greatest Attention to the general Prosperity of these Realms.

With what Joy then must every Friend to Great Britain see a War declar'd, which is become necessary by the strictest Laws of Reason and Humanity; a War which nothing but the Voice of Justice has engag'd us in, and which is founded only upon a Claim to Privileges which can never be invaded without Violence:—— A War, which, as it is begun with a Reluctance that is the sure Result of an Affection for the People, for their Rights and Privileges, their Lives and Fortunes, will not fail to be executed with that Vigour and Resolution, that Courage and Conduct, which seldom fails to attend Undertakings in themselves warrantable, and entered upon after suitable Deliberation:—— Such a War cannot fail of Success, as it cannot fail of a chearful and necessary Support; it being the Honour of the Crown; the British Navigation, the Trade and Commerce of the Three Kingdoms, and all the Dominions dependent thereon, that are now to be asserted and defended:—'Tis no vain Punctilio of Honour, no private Ambition, no wild Attempt to gain useless Conquest, that has now rous'd the martial Spirit of Great Britain; 'tis no Scheme of giving Crowns to foreign Princes, nor of lavishing English Blood, that now bears to Arms; 'tis the Cause of Britain leads to the Field, the Honour of England that calls for our Resentment;—the Interest of every Subject of the Crown summons our Courage, and calls for our united Endeavours to resent the insolent and ungenerous, the unjustifiable and cruel Treatment, which our useful and greatly injured Fellow-Subjects have endured; and for which they can now hope no other Restitution, than what is gain'd by the Success of our ARMS.—In such a Cause, the Heart that is not warm, cannot animate the Breast of a Britain.

It was with the utmost Pleasure, I heard the chearful and universal Acclamations attending the Publication of this Declaration:—In these the antient Voice of Britain speaks in its most powerful Accents; and it must yield the utmost Satisfaction to all Lovers of their Country, to see the whole People UNITED against the Common Enemy, in spite of the fruitless Endeavours of a few Men who have long labour'd to DIVIDE us, as the most infallible Means of effecting our Destruction:—But how impotent are the Effects of their private Malice, how black must appear their Designs, who, while they have pleaded the Service of the Publick, the Defence of our Liberties, the Preservation of our ancient Rights, &c. have laboured only to expose us to the Insults of our Enemies, and to render us incapable of vindicating our National Rights and Privileges against foreign Violence, by fomenting groundless Jealousies at Home.

The whole People are now convinced of the Truth of what has often been repeated in Vindication of the Measures pursued by the present Administration, viz. That as the Interest of the Nation, the Preservation of our Commerce, and the Prosperity of our Manufactures, were thought sufficient Motives for preferring Peace while it could be enjoyed with the Advantages which alone made it desireable; when these Reasons for avoiding a Rupture should cease, the same Patriot-Care which preserv'd Peace, would exert itself in obtaining, by more vigorous Measures, the National Advantages which milder Means were found ineffectual to preserve.

It must yield every Friend to the Protestant Interest, and to Great Britain, the most sensible Pleasure to observe, that tho' a War has been long recommended by the mean Tools of the Malecontents, to promote their own seditious Purposes, without any Regard being paid their guilty Clamours; yet, as soon as it was found necessary for the Good of the Land, it was enter'd upon with the same Earnestness that had been exercised to avoid it; nothing being more evident, than that the Motives of the present Measures are truly Publick, and founded upon such Principles as cannot fail to convince all who are not deaf to Conviction, that both our pacifick and hostile Measures have been pursued from a steady Regard to the Good of Great Britain, to the Trading Interest of these Realms, and the Lives of the Subjects of his Majesty's Crown.

After such a Conduct in the Administration, a Declaration of War must carry with it a Demonstration, that nothing but the most notorious Injustice could wrest it from a Prince who, whilst any Hope remain'd of gaining Restitution to his Subjects, and of maintaining the Honour of the Crown by a Continuance of the Tranquility he so tenaciously preserv'd, never betray'd an Inclination of risquing the Peoples Lives and Liberties, or of putting the Nation to the Charge of a War, till it became necessary for the Good of the People; who, as they must share in the Expence, will be certain Sharers in the Advantages arising from the Success of our Arms:—— This being evidently the State of Great Britain at this time, there is no Room to doubt but that the War which is now declared in the Peoples Behalf, will be chearfully supported by the whole People, as all are equally interested in its Consequences; for as national Sufferings have engag'd us in it, nothing but national Advantages can accrue from our Success.

To the most thoughtful and considerate Part of the Nation, to those who are most terrify'd at the Apprehensions of a War, and who form the most shocking Ideas of the Consequences of publick Hostilities, where Usage like what has been lately receiv'd from Spain, so loudly demands Resentment, hostile Measures will be view'd with Serenity, when they are considered as the only Means in our own Hands to obtain the Justice milder Expedients have been unable to produce. The familiar old Proverb of desperate Diseases requiring desperate Remedies, will vindicate the present Conduct of the British Government, to the Satisfaction of the meanest Subject who weighs the Importance of a free Navigation to the British Dominions:—— The most Timorous must own the Fitness of martial Expedients, now all others have fail'd, to obtain us the Justice that is our Right by the Laws of Nature, as well as the Tenure of Publick Treaties.

If Justice, Honour, and a long Forbearance, evidently proceeding from a Desire to avoid the Shedding of Blood, can in any Situation, or under any Circumstances, hope for the Blessing of Heaven, there is now the strongest Reason for expecting the Favour of Providence upon the Arms of his Majesty; whose Sword is now drawn to vindicate and defend his People, by correcting a Nation which has rejected every honourable Offer of Peace, and violated the most solemn Obligations, upon Pretences too trifling, and too notoriously untrue, to bear Mention;—— a Nation which, in Defiance of the Force of Treaties, and of the common Laws of Hospitality, has not only seized unjustly the Effects of our trading Fellow-subjects, but, with a Cruelty for which they are remarkable thro' the Annals of many Ages, have used with Barbarity the Persons of those they have first depriv'd of their Fortunes and Liberties—— That this is true, all Europe hath witnessed; and that the due Punishment of these Instances of Cruelty and Injustice may be as universally seen, is the earnest Wish of

LONDON

In our last we mentioned the St. Joseph, Capt. White, being arriv'd from hence at Faro. Since which we are advised that she was only arriv'd off the Bar of that Port, drawing too much Water to get over it without lightening; and that in the Night a Row-Boat from Cadiz surpriz'd her at Anchor, and carried her to Guelva. The Grampus Sloop of War happening to be there, went after her the next Morning, but could not come up with her in Time. She had a large Quantity of Woollen Goods on board, and (from Intelligence given from hence) the Privateer publickly declared at Cadiz that he was going to fetch the San Joseph. On the other Hand, the Greyhound Man of War near Cadiz took out of a Genoese Ship Twenty-three Chests of Silver, each 2080 Pieces of Eight, belonging to Spaniards, as the Captain confess'd; for which the Commander of the Man of War paid him the Freight he was to have had for the Voyage.

The large Demand for Shares of Tickets at Mr Wilson's Office, at Craig's-Court, Charing-Cross, has induced him to divide so low as the Sixteenth Part of a Ticket, at the same Price as before. His Method is, and always hath been, to endorse each Proprietor's Name on the Backside of every Ticket so shared, expressing the Part they are entitled to, and immediately on each Ticket's being all shared (for the better Security of the Proprietors) he deposits them with an eminent Banker, there to abide till the Lottery is drawn, and the Prizes delivered. The Tickets, as well as Shares, are always to be had at his Office at the Market Price; and those Adventurers who register the Number of their Tickets or Share with him will have immediate Accounts sent of their Success (if in Town) or to any Part of Great Britain, &c.
